

The Wisdom of Your Face is based on the same ancient principles as traditional Chinese Medicine. The Chinese believed that your face is a reflection of your true inner spirit, the blueprint of your original design. The wisdom written there explains why you think, feel, and behave as you do, and can help you find the life path that brings you joy, relationships that nurture you, and most of all, gain a way to feel true compassion for yourself and everyone you encounter.

Please join author Jean Haner to learn the wisdom you can find in the curve of your cheek, the slant of your nose, even the style of your hair. If you have questions for Jean about your own face or those in your life, please send them to Krysta@newspiritjournal.com or mail them to New Spirit Journal, 14911 Chain Lake Rd., #431, Monroe, WA 98272.

Dear Jean,

"I've lost my job and am doing my best to move forward into a new future. Can I use face reading in job interviews?"

Jean's reply:

These are powerful times and are really testing people on many levels. We do our best with our inner work, we try to trust the process, but when big change happens, it can shake us to our foundations.

The ancient principles of Chinese medicine and Taoist wisdom that my work is based on may seem like they might not be practical and valuable in modern life. But in fact, it's this very profound understanding of how to move through life that can help you make the right decisions about money, career, adapting to stress, and creating a new future for yourself.

So, you're right on target when you realize that face reading could be invaluable in your job hunt. To really know who someone truly is, of course, it's important to observe the entire face, all the features and markings. You can't tell everything there is to know about someone just from looking at one or two features. But here are five clues that you can discern even from your first glimpse of your interviewer's face in order to establish rapport, have clear communication and create a positive impression:

• Jaw: If the first thing you notice about the person who's interviewing you for a job is a strong, well-defined jaw, it's important to realize you have about 10 seconds to establish your credibility. A strong jaw indicates a strong belief system. This is a wonderful trait, but everything has its positives and negatives.

The Wisdom Of Your Face

by Jean Haner

In an interview situation, with limited time, this means that this person is much more likely to make a quick judgment about who you are. They may jump to conclusions if you don't take advantage of your first few moments together to prove yourself.

• Mouth: If your interviewer has a large mouth or very full lips, you can be sure that family, friends and relationships are important to them. Glance around the office and you'll probably see some photos of the people in their lives. Most people would think it'd be unprofessional to mention your family in a job interview, but in fact with a person like this, if
