

Mastery for Everyday Life

reset these systems so that all of them can be autonomous and follow the original instructions of a human being. One can do this easily by simply being in Natural Law or, as a game, use hypnosis or some other facility to reset these human systems.

KC: For those who are ready to live the life they want, where do they start?

DD: The word "want" implies that we don't have something, that we live in scarcity, that there is a hole in the fabric of abundance. In desire, rather, it is to make visible what we already have, but what isn't already showing.

KC: In your classes and also in listening to your radio show, you have the ability to show others how to experience their being. How can that influence our everyday life?

DD: A person is a human being. Period. He or she is not a human being "something." A person tries to be something: a human being nice, a human being rich or a human being healthy. Be human. Be whole, be alive, and in this living, do what you do and get what you get, until you do it differently. There is nothing you have to do, but much will be done.

KC: Give us specifics on having the money we desire

Denny Dwyer lecturing in Vienna, Austria.

What we desire, what we think we want to attract is not something outside ourselves, but merely our other hand. So bring your two hands together. We don't have to do anything to get anything. What looks distant or invisible, or even impossible is merely the other side of you.

KC: Would you like to add something in closing?

DD: You are the water, not the glass. When you desire water and get an empty glass, you invite the water so you can drink it, not fill the glass. You desire the water and yourself to come together visibly. So from the desire to be with what you intrinsically are already, you turn the handle on the faucet. The faucet is the mechanism that knows how to invite the movement of the water and the water flows.

The water isn't coming to fill your empty cup but to be with you in a visible way. You are the water, not the glass. So don't measure the glass, but drink the water, for that is what it and you are here for.
